Dear Former Students,

One of the best and most fun jobs I’ve had in my life was teaching at the University of New Mexico School of Law. The students and community at the UNM Law School are what make it such a special place. People care, and they care about one another. I’m so proud of my students and to hear how they’re doing.

For the Classes of 2003-2007, now is the time for you once again to engage and to be passionate about the Law School and its community. Just as you were once helped, now as an alumnus you can help others.

Yours,
Norman Bay
Emeritus Professor of Law, UNM School of Law

For more assistance or information, please contact us. By phone: 505.277.1457 or email to lobato@law.unm.edu. Online: lawschool.unm.edu

Your contribution to the UNM School of Law is tax deductible to the extent allowed by law.

Donor Name(s) My/Our gift to the Law School will be

BY CHECK:

BY CREDIT CARD:
I was in the Air Force stationed in Doha, Qatar when I read Nelson Mandela’s autobiography and learned more about how he changed Africa’s apartheid system. I loved that he was a lawyer. He believed it was possible to change the world around him through the law. After taking Contracts, Property, and Constitutional Rights classes, I came to understand how I had something to offer the world through my pursuit of the law.

-Tarik Booze, Class of 2015

Help us continue to attract eager and promising law students.

My mom is a maid and my dad is in construction. They've always worked hard and encouraged me to pursue my education. For my undergraduate degree, I worked in construction full-time to support my family and took 18 credit hours every semester. I pursue my education to honor my parents and validate the struggles my family has faced. For me, law school is the American Dream. I’d like to work in Criminal and Immigration Law and one day become a judge.

-Ali Morales, Class of 2016

And every gift counts. No matter the size.

In India, women suffer so much; they are routinely pushed, kicked, and locked up by their husbands. They give up. I was in an arranged marriage and suffered years of abuse. When I moved here, a lawyer helped me get my freedom and changed my life. It was seeing this a reminder in the streets and on Rupees, and thought, if I made it, I’ll go to law school. With my law degree, I want to help women find their strength.

-Komal Kumar, Class of 2016

In India, women suffer so much; they are routinely pushed, kicked, and locked up by their husbands. They give up. I was in an arranged marriage and suffered years of abuse. When I moved here, a lawyer helped me get my freedom and changed my life. It was seeing this a reminder in the streets and on Rupees, and thought, if I made it, I’ll go to law school. With my law degree, I want to help women find their strength.

-Komal Kumar, Class of 2016

IT’S ABOUT COMING TOGETHER FOR ONE ANOTHER

Alumni 6–10 years out of law school have told us they want to give back. Some have told us no need to make it small; however much, any gift made, any gift at all, will be appreciated.

Gifts of any size make a very big difference. No size of the gift does matter.

The key is the total number of recent graduates making small gifts. If 75% of graduates in the Classes of 2003-2007 gave $180/year ($15/month), the Law School would be able to award over $37,500 in new student support.

That is an enormous impact on this law school and its sense of community. We could provide more aid to more students. You should feel proud that your annual gift of any size helps students and validates the struggles my family has faced. For me, law school in the American Dream. I’ll be in Criminal and Immigration Law and one day become a judge.

-Ali Morales, Class of 2016

In India, women suffer so much; they are routinely pushed, kicked, and locked up by their husbands. They give up. I was in an arranged marriage and suffered years of abuse. When I moved here, a lawyer helped me get my freedom and changed my life. It was seeing this a reminder in the streets and on Rupees, and thought, if I made it, I’ll go to law school. With my law degree, I want to help women find their strength.

-Komal Kumar, Class of 2016

IT’S ABOUT COMING TOGETHER FOR ONE ANOTHER

Alumni 6–10 years out of law school have told us they want to give back. Some have told us no need to make it small; however much, any gift made, any gift at all, will be appreciated.

Gifts of any size make a very big difference. No size of the gift does matter.

The key is the total number of recent graduates making small gifts. If 75% of graduates in the Classes of 2003-2007 gave $180/year ($15/month), the Law School would be able to award over $37,500 in new student support.

That is an enormous impact on this law school and its sense of community. We could provide more aid to more students. You should feel proud that your annual gift of any size helps students and validates the struggles my family has faced. For me, law school in the American Dream. I’ll be in Criminal and Immigration Law and one day become a judge.

-Ali Morales, Class of 2016

In India, women suffer so much; they are routinely pushed, kicked, and locked up by their husbands. They give up. I was in an arranged marriage and suffered years of abuse. When I moved here, a lawyer helped me get my freedom and changed my life. It was seeing this a reminder in the streets and on Rupees, and thought, if I made it, I’ll go to law school. With my law degree, I want to help women find their strength.

-Komal Kumar, Class of 2016